ARMENIANS IN RUSSIA.

A Proposition to Return Them to

Their Native Places. The question of the ultimate fate of the which has lain in vexed abeyance since the latter part of 1880, has at last been the latter part of 188, hissat last been decided by the Council of Ministers, pursuant to an imperial mandate. The proposition that they return to their native places in Turkish Armenia will first be made to the refugees. That, of course, will be respectfully declined. It will then be suggested to the local authorities and elders of the various townships and com-munes in which the Armenians have been located for the last eight years that the refugees be enrolled as members of the

Should the townships and communes de-cline to accept the refugees on an e-junt-ity with the native residents and they have a legal right to do so-fr a the Armenians will be accorded separate and Russian communities. Armenians will be accorded separate and independent settlements on Crown lands. They will become Russian subjects and enjoy all the ordinary civil rights pertaining to small burgesses. They will not however, be allowed to acquire landed property, except on lease, for the next ten years. The young men among the refugees become at once liable for military service after taking the oath of allegiance as Russian subjects.

All things considered, it is not an ungeborous airangement on the part of the Government, although the latter has constitled its own interests as well as those of the refugees. It is not believed that they of the Armenians will elect to return to their native country. The time of grace for fielding upon one course or the other expires on February 1 next. #### TOOK THE WRONG CURE. Lost the Desire for Wine, but Continged Smoking.

Alfred T., the American representative of a London publishing house, is an in-veterate smoker of cigarettes. Occasionally he takes claret with his dinner. On his recent arrival in New York he was attracted by those advertisements which unce a sure cure for cigarette flends. He took the cure. At the end of a fort-night he was dining with some friends when he surprised them by declining his when he surprised them by declining his favorite wine.

"No," he said, "somehow or other I haven't cared much for wine lately. But I will smoke a cigarette."

"I 'ranight you were taking the cure," rank led one of the party.

so I am, was the reply, "but somehow it doesn't seem to work," and in a precequied manner he drew a box of the powders from his pocket and handed it to his nearest heighbor for inspection. It was massed from hand to hand. Then a shout went up.

And now the reformed drinker who didn't wish to be reformed is taking legal advice to direover whether he can sue the medical company for killing his truste for wine when it had merely promised to cure his taste for robacco.—New York Times.
